A cow and a horse pastured together in a Rutland field had so desperate a fight a few days ago that it caused the death of the horse. The horse was found sunk in the mire, with only its head out of the water, with one eye gouged out and bleeding in other parts of the body, while the cow was covered with mud and blood and showed marks of the hoofs of the horse. Only one of the cows in the field had horns and that was the one which killed the horse. The cow belonged to Edwin Morgan of Rutland Town and the horse to Thomas Hulihan of the same section.
